- ❖ The Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) was implemented in 1974 as a federal law to protect the privacy of student education records. Students have other rights including the right to request amendment of records and to have some control over the disclosure of personally identifiable information from these records. Students may file a complaint with the Family Policy Compliance Office concerning potential violations. This law applies to all schools that receive funds under an applicable program of the U.S. Department of Education.
